

ADRIGO SMALL & MIDCAP L/S

March 2022

Performance

Adrigo Small & Midcap L/S fell by 5.90% in March net of fees. The Fund's larger holding in Bonesupport (medtech) provided a good contribution. Among the midsized positions, we noted good gains in Atlantic Sapphire (salmon farming). Among the smaller positions, we noted a good percentage gain in Bioservo Technologies (medtech). The Fund's short positions impacted performance negatively in aggregate. Our unlisted holdings impacted performance negatively by 280 bps due to impairments.

We are not satisfied with our performance during Q1 where a handful of more illiquid holdings have affected our performance negatively. These positions are more difficult to hedge. Our conviction remains solid, and we believe a rebound will occur despite how the overall market develops.

Adrigo Small & Midcap L/S has returned 61.2% since inception, net of fees. In the same period, the benchmark STIBOR 1M rate has returned -0.8% and the Carnegie Small Cap Return Index Nordic has a gain of 82.7%.

Market comments and outlook

The Carnegie Small Cap Return Index Nordic rose by 1.91% in March. We noted that Nordic small-caps underperformed their large-cap peers (OMXN40), which rose by 2.90%.

It is easy to forecast a bleak future for the coming years. Russia's invasion of Ukraine puts democracy on the sidelines. Rising interest rates and elevated interest rate sensitivity among public and private participants creates a more stressed new environment compared to history. Weak European consumer and business confidence, driven by geopolitical worries and rising inflation, risk putting pressure on the economy. Swedish NIER forecasts negative real disposable income among Swedish households in 2022. US treasury yields have inverted in March, usually an indication of an upcoming recession. Overall, it is easy to become a pessimist.

At the same time, we have seen the Swedish stock market bouncing some 15% inc. dividends since the bottom during the first week of March. Above all, we have seen a strong US stock market, which is a few percent away from its all-time high. We have seen more risk-on speculative stocks, "meme stocks" once again gained traction. Of course, the US is not as affected as Europe, but still, it is not decoupled from the global economy. It is often said that the best cure for high prices is high prices. It remains to be seen whether the current rise in interest rates will lead to a softer economy, falling interest rates, and if the optimistic stock market mood will continue.

We have noted several profit warnings during March. The common theme has been a lack of components. There has not been a lack of demand, at least not according to the press releases. Order books should continue to be solid, and it will be interesting to follow the development of both order cancellation and order intake in the coming quarters. Margin expectations for the coming year have come down and we have noted more muted share price reactions when profit warnings have been announced.

We have seen interest rates rise in March. This will continue to put pressure on the real estate sector. Banks have already increased their risk-weight on commercial real estate lending. Higher risk-weights have increased the cost of borrowing and made the bond market more attractive. Real estate companies have historically been good at financial engineering. We have seen preference shares, so-called D shares with less voting power, hybrid bonds, and "structuring" through joint ventures, associated companies, and cross-ownerships, always with a stated goal to be ahead of rating agencies and lower borrowing costs. As preference shares have to a greater extent been classified as debt, companies have adapted. Today, hybrid instruments are more popular. However, EPRA is amending its guideline and argues that hybrids should be classified as debt. EPRA does not have a direct impact on rating agencies. Although, we will probably see a harmonization and regulatory tightening in the coming years. We now expect that D shares will also be reclassified in due course. Rising long-term interest rates, tighter regulation, and probably a softer bond market constitute an interesting cocktail for real estate companies whose interest-rate sensitivity and indebtedness are high.

Our smaller holding, Efecte (software), hosted a capital market day. The Company aims to grow by 20% annually mainly through continued upsell to existing customers. Efecte has a net retention (sales growth among existing customers minus churn) of 115%, which means 15% growth at low operating costs. Efecte intends to gain market share in Finland, today the market leader in its segment, and to grow in the DACH. The share is illiquid, but we believe the visibility in our projections is good and the valuation is low. The margin potential is closer to 30% as a mature company, where Efecte currently operates with single-digit operating margins. We believe the stock has a return potential of over 20% annually even in a higher interest rate environment.

Finally, we would like to thank our co-investors for your continued trust!
